PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18, 1863.

For several weeks there has been but one question on the lips of every person, old and young, and that the absorbing, vital subject of the war. An apparently fatal apathy had taken possession of our people, previous to the entering of the rebel army into Pennsylvania, but when it was announced that the Capital of the State was in danger, and when all felt that, if it could not be successfully defended, the rebel hordes would appear on the banks of the Schuylkill, the excitement became intense. Resisting by the defenses of the State was vigorously pushed, and the city soon succeeded the regulations made by the Government.

But those were anxious days and nights which preceded the battle of Gettysburg. Every person you met was agitated and alarmed, and fear of approaching calamity was depicted in every countenance. If Lee should be successful, what was to prevent him from marching on Philadelphia, or on Baltimore, or indeed enforcing a disastrious peace, at the cannon's mouth, in the streets of Washington. Never did weightier issues hang on the result of a single battle; and, under Providence, the Army of the Potomac proved itself equal to the emergency. All honor to that army and its gallant leader. They saved a State from destruction and a Nation from disgrace, if they could not what was perhaps too much to hope for—prevent the shattered columns of the enemy from recrossing the Potomac. The first report of Meade's victory was received here with every demonstration of joy. Never were the tidings of victory borne to more grateful ears. The sense of uneasiness, which had for days hung over the city like a pall, was removed. Men saluted each other in joyful strains, and a feeling of relief was apparent in every face.

This city, although troubled with a few Copperheads, has been thoroughly loyal ever since the opening of the rebellion, and the loyal sentiment never was stronger than at the present time. The fact was clearly manifested during the dark days preceding the battle of Gettysburg. Many smoking indignities could be given in illustration, and I doubt some more striking instances of the calling of two hundred clergymen in a body on the Mayor, and tendering him their services in working upon the entrenchments of the city.

The trait is quietly progressing here, and no indication of trouble appears, nor is any apprehended.

The Union League have sent, under their auspices, three regiments for the defense of the State.

The news of the fall of Vicksburg, following as it did by the victory at Gettysburg, caused a surfeit of good news. Besides the usual popular manifestations of delight, the State House bell was rung on the occasion, which is only done when great events occur. And now we have the victory of Fort Hudson, which should about finish the Rebellion in the Southwest.

BRIEF WAR NEWS.

A dispatch dated Cairo, July 15, to the Cincinnati Herald, says: "Fortress Fort Little Rock, with a large number of prisoners."

Lee is said to be pushing as rapidly as possible for Culpeper, and will hardly stop until he is beyond the Rappahannock. The assembly of feeding his army, which cannot well be accomplished at any great distance from Richmond, will hurry his movements.

General Sherman has advanced as far as Vicksburg at Bolton, half way to Jackson. Johnson had his headquarters at that place at the last account. Sherman has been unable to find any traces of the main body of Johnston's army, and has been much delayed in the roads by obstructions placed there.

Gen. Sherman's victory over Johnston's rear guard was not even more brilliant than first reported. Instead of capturing two thousand prisoners, it seems that he took the entire division comprising the rear guard, including some six thousand infantry, cavalry and artillery. Johnson was in full retreat across Pearl river, with Sherman hotly in pursuit.

By a review of dispatches we have further details of the capture of Fort Hudson, by Gen. Banks. He took possession of the town on the 14th inst. The garrison consisted of 700 men, and he took also 50 field pieces, 200 guns, and 10,000 small arms. A number of the prisoners were Major General Gardner, Brigadier General Cook, and Colonel Goodrich, Mills, and others.

A few days since our black troops at Goodrich's Landing, on the Mississippi river, were attacked by the rebels. The garrison were sent up and succeeded in driving off the attacking party, and shot down the rebels along the river bank. They also captured a number of black men who had been taken prisoners. They were also permitted to Philadelphia, and many of them killed. In the night they left all the plunder they had seized.

RIOT IN NEW YORK!

COPPERHEADS RESISTING THE DRAFT!

Conscription Offices Destroyed!

A NUMBER OF CITIZENS KILLED!

Houses and Stores Plundered!

THE RIOT QUELLED!

On the 16th inst. a mob broke out in New York, ostensibly to resist the draft about to be made, and for three days it defied the civil and military authorities.

The several conscription offices were destroyed, many other buildings burned, and a number of citizens killed. Every negro found on the street was brutally beaten and many fatally.

Gen. Seymour addressed the mob with a stirring, plain and manly speech, and begged them in generous terms to go home. They did not, however, and the mob continued to burn and loot for several days of the week.

Gen. Sherman addressed the mob with a similar speech, and after three days of the week, he was compelled to issue a proclamation declaring that the property of the city must be seized.

The military were called out and the streets were patrolled by them.

Gen. Sherman and his staff were in the city, and in several places he made his way to the mob.

Gen. Sherman, of the military, was most brutally murdered by the mob.

THE RETREAT OF LEE INTO VIRGINIA.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, July 14.—The first news of the retreat of Lee and his army into Virginia was received at Harper's Ferry at four o'clock this morning, from a citizen who lived within their lines.

General Kilpatrick, commanding a cavalry division at that point, soon had the men in the road, and reached Williamsport at 7 o'clock, where he found 800 rebel soldiers who had deserted.

The news reached General Meade's headquarters at five o'clock, when Gen. Buford's division of cavalry was ordered to Falling Waters, where they engaged and captured a number of rebels, under General Pettigrew, who was killed.

The position of the rebels was naturally a strong one, and their route was set of march across, containing principally of bridges constructed like this.

A few men had retreated across the river at the first news, and were accompanied by several hundred men, who were ordered to march up the river to the point of entry, where they were to be met by the army.

The rebels were in the rear of an advanced guard of the army, which was ordered to march up the river to the point of entry, where they were to be met by the army.
