MISTIMITORIS.

THE LEARNED PIG.

A SKETCH FOUNDED ON DIRECT EVIDENCE.

Ned Clement was a traveling showman of the cliden time. He ran the guantles of the business, commencing with a cage of ratile snakes, a box constrictor and as mockey, with which he followed a circuit It was worth double the price of admission to hear Ned in froat of his little tent, lee turing to a crowd of gaping countrymen upon the merits of his 'show.' He kept with the circus for year—in fact, until old age put a quietts to his living curious the circus for year—in fact, until old age put a quietts to his living curious the circus for year—in fact, until old age put a quietts to his living curious to scoenshing eise. The last time I saw him, he was exhibiting a learned pig, to a set of trailin fontoccisis, and 'swallowing a word eixteen inches long' In his career he was subjected to all the viciential cert of a strolling vagabond. One day he was on the top round of success, disburning his money in a country bar room with the liberality of a western hog drover—next day he was 'finatter than a founder.' No double with the circus for the sings and arrows of warrows of waters of the sings and arrows of warrows of country bar room with the liberality of a western hog drover—next day he was 'finatter than a founder.' No double was and the could stake means and the could stake means and the could was more than the country. To add to his misfortunes, he upast his wago one day, by which accident his wife was so badly bruised that he had to leave her in charge of a physician in the next village, while he made a circuit of several villages, to which he had already forwarded bills for performances at stated periods.

One fine summer morning, Ned's neat wagon made its entree into the ancient village of Logtown, se per bills of the day, followed by a dosen transat schoology.—
The box constaining the learned pig was carefully suicoded at the door of the planciple towards and the spinacipal towards; and divers queen looking our leadlord returned to his bar with a proparties on his features. "Gentleman," said he to the crowd, 'the showman has just gone up with the sop. per for his pig. If a few of you were to anseak up quietly and listen, you might eatinfy yourselves whether his pig is a witch." On this hint they all ascended the stairs except the wise Dutchman who originated the idea, who now declared there was no use in going ap—that the witch could see them through the door just as well as if ahe was among them. Ned had taken the them through the door just as well as if he had been them through the door just as well as if he had been them through the door just as well as if he was among them. Ned had taken the presention to arrange matters so that no one could look in, even through the key hole; but the outsiders could hear the most ordinary soise made is the room.— Ned was no wentriloquist—more's the pity; but is working his pappets he had no trained himself to noudlate his voice that he could give a tolerable invitation of a woman talking. He commenced eating the supper himself to noudlate his voice that he could give a tolerable invitation of a woman talking. He commenced eating the supper himself to material key, and then an assured them in a falsetto voice, using terms of endearment, and giving such initiations of kinning as to leave no doubte upon the minds of the considers that two persons were in the room. ly, there are few places the size of this that contain so many superstitions fools? The pig gave a squeal similar to one emitted by a grunter when he has a harp fairle inserted between his shoulders.—Ned whipped up his hone and left in a hurry, and the denizens of Logtowa who saw him then saw him no more forever? The crowd was 'sold;' every one felt it, and left in a hurry, except my original Dutchman, who maintains to this day that the woman was a witch—that she possessed the power, there was nothing to prevent her from being a pig and a woman at one and the same time!—Sundoy Dispatch.
